Post-Master in EU Customs Law

“This exclusive EFS post-master is your opportunity to gain in-depth knowledge of EU customs law”

◀ PROF. WALTER DE WIT

Ongoing globalisation, but also increasing protectionism resulting in trade wars, rising trade volumes and cross-border flows, are prompting an increased focus on export controls and import regulations among companies in international supply chains. Meanwhile the European Commission published proposals to reform the EU Customs Union, which will change customs operations radically once adopted, especially for businesses doing business in the EU. As well as its consequences for businesses, this changing environment also has implications for you as a customs or indirect tax professional. It means you need to adapt, to develop and to gain new insights, while also making sure you maintain an overview. You also have to keep your valuable, specialised knowledge up-to-date and to translate this into practical benefits. Your spare time may be limited, but nevertheless you are expected to anticipate these changes.

The EFS post-master in EU customs law (PMC) comprises two one-week modules that will ensure you are completely up-to-date with the world of EU customs law. The programme introduces you to the Union Customs Code and provides you with a detailed understanding of general issues in EU customs law, as well as in-depth training in relevant strategic and business issues. EFS seeks to deepen, broaden and promote an exchange of knowledge, while also creating networking opportunities.

The first module on the PMC programme will discuss general issues within EU customs law including formal customs law, customs valuations, origins, tariff classifications and special procedures. It also includes a tour of Rotterdam Harbour so that you can experience one of the world's largest ports in all its glory!

The second module focuses on strategic and business issues in customs, including origin management, trade facilitation and developments, VAT and customs, and strategic controls and sanctions. You will also complete a course examining the influence of customs law on multinationals, and visit the Dutch Customs Authorities at the APM Terminals Maasvlakte II site in Rotterdam.

All programme topics are discussed from the perspective of the Union Customs Code. Rulings under EU Court of Justice cases issued under the Community Customs Code (applicable until 1 May 2016) will also be discussed in detail, given that most of these rulings remain relevant under the Union Customs Code. Successful completion of the post-master will require you to write and defend a thesis.

EFS modules are taught by renowned professors and prestigious guest speakers, whose experience, expertise and reputation in their specialised fields guarantee high educational standards.

PMC participants work in a variety of fields, including for multinationals, in international trade and consultancy, in legal practice or the academic world or judiciary, and for tax or customs authorities.

Most important advantages

- In-depth education

- Bridge between theory and practice
